

Faculty Mentor Agreement

for Global Studies Majors

All Global Studies undergraduate majors must have a mentor in order to enter and continue in the program. The role of the mentor is to guide the student, not to advise the student on Global Studies undergraduate program requirements.

The role of the faculty mentor is to inform and guide the student in a professional and/or geographic interest area. The student should select a mentor who shares some similar interests. Mentors may be chosen from any UO University department and must be permanent academic faculty members (e.g. not graduate students or visiting faculty members). A list of participating faculty members is provided under the Global Studies heading in the University of Oregon Catalog. We suggest you might want to consider these faculty members when starting to identify a potential mentor, though students may also choose a faculty member with global interests who is not included on that list.

Your faculty mentor is someone who will mentor you through the program in your academic and professional interests. Keep in mind that your faculty mentor is someone you will probably want to ask for letters of recommendation and references in the future.

The statement below, signed by the faculty mentor indicating acceptance of the above responsibilities, must be submitted before an applicant will be fully accepted into the Global Studies major. If the student chooses to write an honors thesis, the student may also choose to ask the faculty member to supervise their thesis (An Honors Thesis Advisor Agreement must also be signed and on file).

Remember that questions about the Global Studies major requirements should be directed to the Global Connections team in the College and Career Advising Office located in Tykeson Hall.
